In Brugelette (Hainaut), the Château d'Attre is one of the most authentic witnesses of the 18th century in Belgium. The listed park, at the heart of the 17 ha estate delimited by the Dendre, is also worth the detour.

A Louis XIV castle

Built on the foundations of a medieval fortress, it was home to Archduchess Marie-Christine of Austria and Duke Albert of Saxony Teschen.

Designed in a Louis XIV style, the castle is composed of a main building framed by 2 wings. Its two floors are made of local sandstone, limestone rock and bricks.

The uniformity and clear distribution of its rooms are characteristic of this castle, which decor, furniture and collections date back to the 18th century.

A unique park

Behind the castle awaits a landscaped garden, well worth the detour.

Combining an English and woodland garden, it features:

- a belvedere tower
- an 18th century dovecote
- a hermitage
- the Vignou tower
- a Swiss chalet
- an artificial cave (pre-romantic style) named "The rock"

We loved

The guided tour of the park, presenting the wealth of symbols in its architecture and structure. Try it in spring: there are waves and waves of anemones then...
